Suite Overview

The Learning and Skills Improvement Service (LSIS) has developed new National Occupational Standards (NOS) for Supported Employment, which provide the statements of skills and knowledge needed by the supported employment workforce.

Supported employment is the term for high quality, personalised support for people with disabilities and/or disadvantages which enables them to seek, access and retain employment. The people who provide support tend to have a variety of job titles such as job coaches, employment advisers, employment consultants and employment support officers. Jobcentre Plus staff, Disability Employment Advisors, Care Managers, schools and colleges are often a key referral route onto supported employment. Individuals can also self-refer. A person's line manager and colleagues in the work place can also provide support; they are sometimes called 'natural supports'.

Previous research and consultation has helped to inform the detail of the Supported Employment NOS, namely the "Supported Employment and Job Coaching: best practice guidelines" (Department of Health and Valuing People Now: HM Government published March 2011).

About the NOS

The Supported Employment National Occupational Standards (NOS) are not designed to describe any level, or type of supported employment role. Role definitions are normally based on a number of different functional areas and therefore a given role may draw on a number of NOS.

There is no expectation that any individual job role would encompass all the performance requirements across every NOS within the suite; rather that specific jobs will utilise those NOS appropriate to their role.

The NOS for Supported Employment do not equate directly to qualifications, but can be used to inform and underpin relevant competency-based qualifications for supported employment practitioners.

Performance criteria and Knowledge and understanding

Each National Occupational Standard comprises a number of performance criteria which an individual should demonstrate to be competent in the sector, as well as the underpinning knowledge and understanding statements.

It should be noted that there is not an immediate and direct relationship between an individual performance criterion and a knowledge and/or understanding statement, with the knowledge statements underpinning the whole of each National Occupational Standard.

Additional Information

Scope/range

The scope or reach of the Supported Employment National Occupational Standards is expressed within the definition of supported employment and the functional process.

Definition

The definition of Supported Employment is

....the high quality, personalised support for people with disabilities and/or other disadvantages which enables them to seek, access and retain employment in the open labour market.

Functional Process

The functional process follows the “Supported Employment and Job Coaching: best practice guidelines” (Department of Health and Valuing People Now: HM Government publication March 2011) which specify nine key stages in the supported employment process:

- A. Employer engagement
- B. Job seeker engagement
- C. Understanding employer needs and identifying vacancies
- D. Getting to know the job seeker
- E. Getting to know the job
- F. Agreeing a Plan together
- G. Arranging a Job Match
- H. Arranging the right support
- I. Developing a career

In addition to the functional process, there is an expectation that supported employment practitioners will apply a value based and ethical approach and will seek to develop their own practice. These aspects are captured as an addition to the functional process:

- J. Develop own supported employment practice

The functional process forms the basis of content for the Supported Employment NOS. By interrogating “what needs to happen?” in each stage of the process, the performance criteria and associated knowledge and skills required are drawn out.

It should be noted that there will not necessarily be individual NOS that are identical in name or related specifically to each of the individual functional processes, since it is the combination of functions which define the performance and knowledge requirements for those delivering a given role.

In addition, while there will be functions which are met by the Supported Employment suite of NOS, there will be functions that are also supported by other existing NOS from other suites, such as Employer Engagement NOS.

Values

For a supported employment practitioner to practice competently he or she must apply skills and knowledge that is informed by a set of values. Supported employment practitioners are expected to be aware of and to apply a value based and ethical approach in their practice.

It is also recognised that the values as well as the NOS may need to be placed within the local, national, social and political context in which supported employment activities are undertaken.

Values of Supported Employment

1. An understanding of the positive contribution people with disabilities and/or disadvantages can make in the workplace.
2. Understand the main components of a real job (wages are paid at the going rate for the job, with the same terms and conditions as all other employees; the job helps the person to meet their life goals and aspirations; the role is valued by managers and colleagues; the job has similar hours and times at work as other employees, with safe working conditions).
3. Understand the “zero rejection” philosophy of supported employment and that everyone can work, with the right job and the right support.
4. Supported employment does not adhere to a work readiness model. It is about getting people into competitive employment first with training and support on the job: a ‘place then train’ approach.
5. Job search should happen at the earliest opportunity.
6. Choice and control – people are presented with a variety of experiences, options and support to achieve their career aspirations. Support is built around an individual, promoting choice and career satisfaction. All options assume successful employability.
7. Partnership – there is genuine partnership between the person, their family carers, employers, community supports and the provider of supported employment.
8. Full inclusion – people are supported to be full and active members of their workforces and wider communities, both socially and economically.
9. Support services recognise the importance of the employer as a customer of supported employment in their own right with requirements that need to be satisfied.
10. Draws on Social Role Valorisation (SRV) in recognising that people with disabilities and/or disadvantages are often regarded as of less value than others in society, resulting in poor life outcomes. Employment is a valued social role and becoming employed can help reverse societal devaluation, with wider positive consequences for the person.
11. Draws on the social model of disability recognizing that disability is the product of the physical, organizational and attitudinal barriers present within society leading to discrimination. The removal of discrimination requires a change of approach and thinking in the way in which society is organized, in this case removing barriers to employment.
12. Recognises that not many people stay in the same job for the whole of their working lives and people with disabilities and/or disadvantages are no different in having to adapt to changing labour markets and wanting to improve their working lives. Supported employment should encourage the career development of individuals by promoting training opportunities and seeking options for increased responsibility by offering time unlimited support.

Glossary

Advocate: In this context this means that supported employment practitioners should argue for the employment of a person with a disability or disadvantage, argue for equality of opportunity and for reasonable adjustments in the workplace to ensure positive outcomes for the job seeker and the employer. It also means being a supporter or defender of the rights of the job seeker.

Assistive Technology: Assistive technology is technology used by individuals with disabilities to carry out functions that might otherwise be difficult or impossible. Assistive technology can include personal aids as well as hardware, software, and peripherals that assist people with disabilities in accessing computers or other information technologies. In the context of employment it can include hand-held devices that can prompt work tasks, jigs that can hold or guide materials and equipment adapted to specific tasks.

Better-off calculations: This is a calculation that aims to show jobseekers whether they will be better off in work than when living on welfare benefits. It will take into account details of the amount of welfare benefit income they receive, including housing benefit covering rent and the amount of money they can earn in paid work, along with any welfare benefits or tax credits they can receive when in work, and shows if they will be better off going into paid work.

Circles of support: A Circle of Support, sometimes called a circle of friends, is a group of people who meet together on a regular basis to help somebody accomplish their personal goals in life. Often used in person centred planning, the Circle acts as a community around that person (the 'focus person') who, for one reason or another, is unable to achieve what they want in life on their own and decides to ask others for help.

Co-production: This refers to active input by the people who use services, as well as – or instead of – those who have traditionally provided them. It contrasts with approaches that treat people as passive recipients of services designed and delivered by someone else. In the employment context this means job seekers leading or making a full contribution to processes such as completing a Vocational Profile, or deciding what job to pursue.

Job Development: This refers to finding a person's preferred job through contact with employers. It includes all aspects of identifying suitable jobs and potential employers, approaching employers on behalf of a job seeker, obtaining a job and, where necessary, negotiating reasonable adjustments (see below).

Natural Supports: The focus on natural supports emphasises the participation of supervisors and co-workers in the hiring, training and supervising supported employees. The concept of natural support highlights the need to understand the worksite culture and what is "natural" or "typical" for that particular situation."

Prompting and fading techniques: Prompts, or cues, are a way of providing enough information to the job seeker about how to do their job task and how to perform its steps correctly. Prompts are usually seen to differ in their power, or intrusiveness, from demonstration at one end through verbal prompts, gestures to physical assistance. Prompts can also include written lists, checklists, audio-tapes, or other forms of assistive technology. Fading means reducing the power of prompts over time to leave the person as independent in their task as possible.

Reasonable adjustment: The term “reasonable adjustment” comes from the Disability Discrimination element of the Equality Act and refers to the actions institutions need to make in order to alleviate or remove the effects of a ‘substantial disadvantage.’ In practice this means doing things differently if the usual way would substantially disadvantage a disabled person. It can mean providing additional services or equipment. Reasonable adjustments in employment could include changing recruitment procedures, altering the physical environment to make it more accessible, or changing training to meet a person’s needs.

Supported Employment: Supported employment is the term for high quality, personalised support for people with disabilities and/or disadvantages which enables them to seek, access and retain employment in the open labour market. It is a “place and train” approach that does not rely on long periods of pre-vocational training or a basic level of qualification or experience.

Task analysis: A task analysis is the process of breaking down a work task into smaller parts. The best way to develop a task analysis is to observe someone performing a task and write down every step that is performed. Used more commonly with people who have cognitive problems and find it difficult to learn steps, task analysis makes a task easy to replicate and teach parts of a job and link these together until the person does them independently.

Vocational profiling: This is a process of “getting to know” the person to identify their aspirations, learning needs, individual skills, former experiences and job preferences. It can involve inputs from those who know the person well, but is conducted from a “zero rejection” stand-point (see below). The profile informs practical job finding and helps to achieve a good job match for the job seeker that suits their skills and preferences. Many people have never worked or not worked for many years and will need support to make informed choices about career opportunities.

Work trials: In the context of people with disabilities or disadvantages, work trials are time limited placements in real jobs. They allow the job seeker to learn more about what they are good at and what they want to do, enable employers to find out more about what the person can do. Supported employment practitioners can provide on-the-job support enabling them to better understand the training and support needs of the job seeker. Work trials may be designed to lead to a job if criteria are met on all sides, or to inform next steps towards the right job.

Zero rejection: Part of the underlying philosophy of supported employment, this means that anyone who wishes to work can work, provided the correct level of support is available. It stems from a rejection of assessments in the past that categorised people into those who could or could not work without taking into account effective job match, task teaching and support.

Links to other NOS

Links to individual NOS which have been identified as relevant to supported employment practitioners are included in the mapping of functions to NOS

A number of existing NOS suites are identified to ensure that supported employment practitioners are able to identify and access other NOS which may be relevant to their role.

External Links

The NOS for Supported Employment have been developed with the input of the supported employment practitioners across the UK. They represent the minimum recommended performance and knowledge and, alongside other relevant NOS or accepted standards, can be used to inform and underpin training courses and qualifications, as well as individual professional development.

The NOS have been written to take account of codes of ethics or conduct and models of practice or competence which may apply, and links to the most widely recognised are included below.

It should be noted that many codes and models that apply to supported employment practitioners expect that the practitioner will have a clear understanding of their professional boundaries, and should practise only in line with their own knowledge and professional competence.

Enable individuals in supported employment to be productive and integrated in their workplace

Overview

This standard is about enabling individuals in paid employment and their employers to have the support and resources they require to be productive in work and do a job which meets the employer's requirements. It enables the practitioner to explore and use proven techniques to support task training, problem solving and coaching in the workplace. It includes working with the employer and employee to identify and obtain any special resources or assistive technologies to enable the individual to do their job and become as independent as possible in the workplace. This also includes identification of funding sources that may be available to enable the job seeker to enter and perform productively within the workplace.

The standard also identifies help to those employed to play a full role in the social life of the workplace.

In the context of this standard the term 'job seeker' applies to an individual seeking some form of paid employment.

This standard is for all supported employment practitioners.
